REDFISH ONCE DISDAINED NOW COMES INTO OWN

Redfish once disdained by fisher- speeds up their production and conse Gloucester when five draggers landed a total of 405,000 pounds of the small horny-looking fish now labeled 'sea-perch" for marketing purposes.

Redfish is receiving a hearty welcome from Gloucesterites in that some 200 families are earning their livelihood in working on the fish, filleting it for the western and south-The latest to join the ranks of the redfish filleting plants is the Producers Fish company where Benjamin Curcurru, the manager, has a force of 15 men at work this morning on a trip of 30,000 pounds, and intends to augment that force as soon as occasion demands.

The Cape Ann Cold Storage company, John DelTorchio, has been in the redfish filleting game for over a year and at present has a force of 50 men employed ,reaching at the peak of the filleting when mackerel and whiting are abundant, an en-rollment of more than 100 men.

Gorton-Pew Fisheries is another of the pioneers in redfish filleting, and today has the largest force locally, with their ranks numbering over 100 workers on redfish alone.

Boon to Fishermen

Redfish is also a boon to the fish-The grounds are less than five hours from Eastern Point to the modern auxiliary craft, and hardly an hour offshore from Chatham. Their trips last but four days which amount to subtract for expenses. Prefer to Land Here.

Fortunately for Gloucester, the local draggers prefer to land their red-fish trips here, according to informa-tion gleaned by a Times reporter. The fishermen argue that they are saved the perils of trading at Boston, and the extra 30-mile voyage from the Hub to this port after their fish are out. It gives them more time at their homes or ashore, and is more profitable, they claim, an argument which to some, echoes the reason why a fish pier would be an asset to the port in that it would provide room for more local vessels that might de-

The demand for redfish shows no signs of diminishing in the slightest having advanced orders for five freight carloads. The fillets are eaten in sandwiches out in the great open spaces, and are as popular 'there as the celebrated "hot-dog" is

Redfish at its best is a small fish and even at that, only 25 percent of it can be used in the fillet, the rest of it being discarded. Gorton-Pew Fisheries however, have taken a large supply of the 75 per cent waste and converted it into fertilizer and fish meal, the latter being sold as hog and cattle food
